

How They Dress on the Job...

...on Wall Street, where you have to look polished. Steal these women's style tips (no pantsuits!) and look like a billion.

Pencil-sharp
On Baczynska: jacket, Karen
Walker; dress,
Hellessey; shirt,
Raoul; cuff,
Robert Lee
Morris; bag,
Aimee
Kestenberg;
pumps,
Alexander
Wang.

"Shoes and bags add personality."

Her job: Eva Baczynska, 31, is a VP at an asset-management firm. "My role is client-facing," she says, "so I like a softer look. Leave power suits to the boys!"
Her outfit here: "I choose one neutral item, like a gray dress, then spike it up with bright accessories," says Baczynska.
Her wardrobe M.O.: "I never pick my outfit the night before," she says. "My mood changes! I want to feel like what I'm wearing reflects how I feel that day."

Lady in red
On Howard: coat,
Vince Camuto;
shirt, Elizabeth
and James; skirt,
Ann Taylor; bag,
Coach; tights,
Wolford; pumps,
Manolo Blahnik.

"I have a grab-and-go wardrobe."

Her job: Libby Howard, 29, is a senior associate at a global investment bank. "The key to Wall Street fashion is investing in elegant, chic basics that you can mix and match on a moment's notice—or on minimal sleep," says Howard.
Her outfit here: "I tend to wear print or colorful tops with pencil skirts," she says. "If I wear a print bottom, it's in a darker palette like this leopard skirt."
Her signature: "My oversize men's watch," she says. "It's like a throwback statement to guys in the eighties showing off their Rolexes. Badass."
